Forecast for Friday 10 Mar 2023

Weather: Mostly dry and very cold overnight with a severe chill although winds will ease later in the night. A few light snow showers are possible, mainly for the Moray hills and Northern Cairngorms. By day a lot of dry and bright weather, the risk of a snow flurry for more northern ranges. During the afternoon a band of showers may start making its way south although this may be towards the evening period, otherwise continuing bright and sunny.

Chance of cloud-free hill tops above 800m: 90%, some patchy low cloud early in the day in the east, otherwise clear summits.

Low cloud and visibility: Patchy low cloud in the early morning above 600m but mainly clear summits all day with far reaching views. If the band of showers moves south later in the day scattered cloud may form for a time around 700m with visibility falling poor in the snow showers.
